It’s important you receive an accurate diagnosis and understand CLL. Your doctor may monitor your health via an approach called active surveillance or watch and wait.

Before you start any treatment, it’s essential to ask your doctor if you have had relevant CLL testing, and discuss what the results could mean for you.

Have you discussed your treatment goals and options with your doctor? Understanding a treatment’s course and potential side effects and its impact on your other health conditions and your lifestyle is essential. If you don’t feel supported or an active member of your team, then it is always best to get another opinion if you are able.

- Learn more about CLL treatment decisions
- Ask about testing and whether you need to be retested over time
- Discuss clinical trials with your physician
- Visit powerfulpatients.org/cll